1. Designers don't just make things. They communicate the _____ for it first, so a client can react before time is spent on a finished piece. Recall from 1.1: a rough sketch is often shown to a _____ for approval. This is one of the earliest, most common ways a plan actually gets communicated.
2. The repeating cycle of sharing work, getting feedback, and revising is the _____.
3. A _____ is a written document laying out a project's goals, audience, requirements, and constraints before work begins, connecting directly to 1.3's client/audience/goals.

Discuss: Why might it be a bad idea to build a finished design before showing anyone your plan for it?
